Choice Poetry.

NOVEMBER.

Much have I spoken of the faded leaf;
Long have I listened to the wailing wind,
And watched it ploughing through the heavy clouds!
For autumn charms my melancholy mind.

When Autumn comes, the poet sings a dirge;
The year must perish; all the flowers are dead;
The sheaves are gathered, and the mottled quail
Runs in the stubble, but the lark has fled!

Still, Autumn ushers in the Christmas cheer,
The holly berries and the ivy tree;
They weave a chaplet for the Old Year's heir;
These waiting mourners do not sing for me!

I find sweet peace in depths of Autumn woods,
Where grow the ragged ferns and roughened moss;
The naked, silent trees have taught me this—
The loss of beauty is not always loss!

Miscellaneous.

A STRUGGLE FOR LIFE.

ONE morning last April, as I was passing through Boston Common, which lies pleasantly between my residence and my office, I met a gentleman lounging along The Mall. I am generally preoccupied when walking, and often thread my way through crowded streets without distinctly observing a single soul. But this man's face forced itself upon me, and a very singular face it was. His eyes were faded, and his hair, which he wore long, was flecked with gray. His hair and eyes, if I may say so, were seventy years old, the rest of him not thirty. The youthfulness of his figure, the elasticity of his gait, and the venerable appearance of his head, were incongruities that drew more than one pair of curious eyes toward him. He was evidently an American,—the New England cut of countenance is unmistakable,—evidently a man who had seen something of the world; but strangely old and young.

Before reaching the Park Street gate, I had taken up the thread of thought which he had unconsciously broken; yet throughout the day this old young man, with his unwrinkled brow and silvered locks, glided in like a phantom between me and my duties.

The next morning I again encountered him on The Mall. He was resting lazily on the green rails, watching two little sloops in distress, which two ragged ship-owners had consigned to the mimic perils of the Pond. The vessels lay becalmed in the middle of the ocean, displaying a tantalizing lack of sympathy with the frantic helplessness of the owners on shore. As the gentleman observed their dilemma, a light came into his faded eyes, then died out, leaving them drearier than before. I wondered if he, too, in his time, had sent out ships that drifted and drifted and never came to port; and if these poor toys were to him types of his own losses.

"I would like to know that man's story," I said, half aloud, halting in one of those winding paths which branch off from the quietness of the Pond, and end in the rush and tumult of Tremont Street.

"Would you?" replied a voice at my side. I turned and faced Mr. H——, a neighbor of mine, who laughed heartily at finding me talking to myself. "Well," he added, reflectingly, "I can tell you this man's story; and if you will match the narrative with anything as curious, I shall be glad to hear it."

"You know him then?"

"Yes and no. I happened to be in Paris when he was buried."

"Buried!"

"Well, strictly speaking, not buried; but something quite like it. If you've a spare half-hour," continued my interlocutor, "We'll sit on this bench, and I will tell you all I know of an affair that made some noise in Paris a couple of years ago. The gentleman himself, standing yonder, will serve as a sort of frontispiece to the romance,—a full page illustration, as it were."

The following pages contain the story that Mr. H——related to me. While he was telling it, a gentle wind arose; the minature sloops drifted feebly about the ocean; the wretched owners flew from point to point, as the deceptive breezes promised to waft the barks to either shore; the early robins trilled now and then from the newly fringed elms; and the old young man leaned on the rail in the sunshine, wearily, little dreaming that two gossips were discussing his affairs within twenty yards of him.

Three people were sitting in a chamber whose one large window overlooked the Place Vendome. M. Dorine, with his back half turned on the other two occupants of the apartment, was reading the Moniteur, pausing from time to time to wipe his glasses, and taking scrupulous pains not to glance towards the lounge at his right, on which were seated Mademoiselle Dorine and a young American gentleman, whose handsome face rather frankly told his position in the family. There was not a happier man in Paris that afternoon than Philip Wentworth. Life had become so delicious to him that he shrunk from looking beyond to-day. What could the future add to his full heart? what might it not take away? In certain natures the deepest joy has always something of melancholy in it, a presentiment, a fleeting sadness, a feeling without a name. Wentworth was conscious of this subtile shadow, that night, when he rose from the lounge, and thoughtfully held Julie's hand to his lip for a moment before parting. A careless observer would not have thought him, as he was, the happiest man in Paris.

M. Dorine laid down his paper and came forward. "If the house," he said, "is such as M. Martin describes it, I advise you to close with him at once. I would accompany you, Philip, but the truth is, I am too sad at losing this little bird to assist you in selecting a cage for her. Remember, the last train for town leaves at five. Be sure not to miss it; for we have seats for M. Sardou's new comedy to-morrow night. By to-morrow night," he added laughingly, "little Julie here will be an old lady,—'t is such an age from now until then."

The next morning the train bore Philip to one of the loveliest spots within thirty miles of Paris. An hour's walk through green lanes brought him to M. Martin's estate. In a kind of dream the young man wandered from room to room, inspected the conservatory, the stables, the lawns, the strip of woodland through which a merry brook sang to itself continually; and, after dining with M. Martin, completed the purchase, and turned his steps towards the station, just in time to catch the express train.

As Paris stretched out before him, with its million lights twinkling in the early dusk, and its sharp spires here and there pricking the sky, it seemed to Philip as if years had elapsed since he left the city. On reaching Paris he drove to his hotel, where he found several letters lying on the table. He did not trouble himself even to glance at their superscrip tions as he threw aside his travelling surtout for a more appropriate dress.

If, in his impatience to see Mademoiselle Dorine, the cars had appeared to walk, the fiacre which he had secured at the station appeared to creep. At last it turned into the Place Vendome, and drew up before M. Dorine's residence. The door opened as Philip's foot touched the first step. The servant silently took his cloak and hat, with a special deference, Philip thought; but was he not now one of the family?

"M. Dorine," said the servant slowly, "is unable to see Monsieur at present. He wishes Monsieur to be shown up to the salon."

"Is Mademoiselle—"

"Yes Monsieur"

"Alone?"

"Alone, Monsieur," repeated the man, looking curiously at Philip, who could scarcely repress an exclamation of pleasure.

It was the first time that such a privelege had been accorded him. His interviews with Julie had always taken place in the presence of M. Dorine, or some member of the household. A well-bred Parisian girl has but a formal acquaintance with her lover.

Philip did not linger on the staircase; his heart sang in his bosom as he flew up the steps, two at a time. Ah! this wine of air which one drinks at twenty and seldom after! He hastened through the softly lighted hall, in which he detected the faint scent of her favorite flowers, and stealthily opened the door of the salon.

The room was darkened. Underneath the chandelier stood a slim black casket on trestles. A lighted candle, a crucifix, and some white flowers were on a table near by. Julie Dorine was dead.

When M. Dorine heard the indescribable cry that rang through the silent house, he hurried from the library, and found Philip standing like a ghost in the middle of the chamber.

It was not until long afterwards that Wentworth learned the details of the calamity that had befallen him. On the previous night Mademoiselle Dorine had retired to her room in seemingly perfect health. She dismissed her maid with a request to be awakened early the next morning. At the appointed hour the girl entered the chamber. Mademoiselle Dorine was sitting in an arm-chair, apparently asleep. The candle had burnt down to the socket; a book lay half open on the carpet at her feet. The girl started when she saw that the bed had not been occupied, and that her mistress still wore an evening dress. She rushed to Mademoiselle Dorine's side. It was not slumber. It was death.

Two messages were at once despatched to Philip, one to the station at G——, the other to his hotel. The first missed him on the road, the second he had neglected to open. On his arrival at M. Dorine's house, the servant, under the supposition that Wentworth had been advised of Mademoiselle Dorine's death, broke the intelligence with awkward cruelty, by showing him directly to the salon.

Mademoiselle Dorine's wealth, her beauty, the suddeness of her death, and the romance that had in some way attached itself to her love for the young American, drew crowds to witness the funeral ceremonies which took place in the church in the Rue d'Aguessseau. The body was to be laid in M. Dorine's tomb, in the cemetery of Montmartre.

This tomb requires a few words of description. First there was a grating of filigraned iron; through this you looked into a small vestibule or hall, at the end of which was a massive door of oak opening upon a short flight of stone steps descending into the tomb. The vault was fifteen or twenty feet square, ingeniously ventilated from the ceiling, but unlighted. It contained two sarcophagi: the first held the remains of Madame Dorine, long since dead; the other was new, and on one side the letters J. D., in monogram, interwoven with fleurs-de-lis.

The funeral train stopped at the gate of the small garden that enclosed the place of burial, only the immediate relatives following the bearers into the tomb. A slender wax candle, such as is used in Catholic churches, burnt at the the foot of the uncovered sarcopahagus, casting a dim glow over the centre of the apartment, and deepening the shadows which seemed to huddle together in the corners. By this flickering light the coffin was placed in its granite shell, the heavy slab laid over it reverently, and the oaken door revolved on its rusty hinges, shutting out the uncertain ray of sunshine that had ventured to peep in on the darkness.

M. Dorine, muffled in his cloak, threw himself on the back seat of the carriage too abstracted in his grief to observe that he was the only occupant of the vehicle. There was a sound of wheels grating on the graveled avenue, and then all was silence again in the cemetery of Montmartre. At the main entrance the carriages parted company, dashing off into various streets at a pace that seemed to express a sense of relief. The band plays a dead march going to the grave, but Fra Diavolo coming from it.

It is not with the retreating carriages that our interest lies. Nor yet wholly with the dead in her mysterious dream; but with Philip Wentworth.

The rattle of wheels had died out of the air when Philip opened his eyes, bewildered, like a man abruptly roused from slumber. He raised himself on one arm and stared into the surrounding blackness. Where was he? In a second the truth flashed upon him. He had been left in the tomb! While kneeling on the farther side of the stone box, perhaps he had fainted, and in the last solemn rites his absence had been unnoticed.

His first emotion was one of natural terror. But this passed as quickly as it came. Life had ceased to be so very precious to him; and if it were his fate to die at Julie's side, was not that the fulfilment of the desire which he had expressed to himself a hundred times that morning? What did it matter, a few years sooner or later? He must lay down the burden at last. Why not then? A pang of self-reproach followed the thought. Could he so lightly throw aside the love that had bent over his cradle. The sacred name of mother rose involuntarily to his lips. Was it not cowardly to yield up without a struggle the life which he should guard for her sake? Was it not his duty to the living and the dead to face the difficulties of his position, and overcome them if it were within his power?

With an organization as delicate as a woman's he had the spirit which, however sluggish in repose, can leap with a kind of exultation to measure its strength with disaster. The vague fear of the supernatural, that would affect most men in a similar situation, found no room within his heart. He was simply shut in a chamber from which it was necessary that he should obtain release within a given period. That this chamber contained the body of the woman he loved, so far from adding to the terror of his case, was a circumstance from which he drew consolation. She was a beautiful white statue now. Her soul was far hence; and if that pure spirit could return, would it not be to shield him with her love? It was impossible that the place should not engender some thought of the kind. He did not put the thought entirely from him as he rose to his feet and stretched out his hands in the darkness; but his mind was too healthy and practical to indulge long in such speculations.

Philip chanced to have in his pocket a box of wax-tapers which smokers use. After several ineffectual attempts, he succeeded in igniting one against the dark wall, and by its momentary glare percieved that the candle had been left in the tomb. This would serve him in examining the fastenings of the vault. If he could force the inner door by any means, and reach the grating, of which he had an indistinct recollection, he might hope to make himself heard. But the oaken door was immovable, as solid as the wall itself, into which it fitted air-tight. Even if he had had the requisite tools, there were no fastenings to be removed; the hinges were set on the outside.

Having ascertained this, he replaced the candle on the floor, and leaned against the wall thoughtfully, watching the blue fan of flame that wavered to and fro, threatening to detach itself from the wick. "At all events," he thought, "the place is ventilated." Suddenly Philip sprang forward and extinguished the light. His existence depended on that candle!

He had read somewhere, in some account of shipwreck, how the survivors had lived for days upon a few candles which one of the passengers had insanely thrown into the long-boat. And here he had been burning away his very life.

By the transient illumination of one of the tapers, he looked at his watch. It had stopped at eleven,—but at eleven that day, or the preceding night? The funeral, he knew, had left the church at ten. How many hours had passed since then? Of what duration had been his swoon? Alas! it was no longer possible for him to measure those hours which crawl like snails by the wretched, and fly like swallows over the happy.

He picked up the candle, and seated himself on the stone steps. He was a sanguine man, this Wentworth, but, as he weighed the chances of escape, the prospect did not seem encouraging. Of course he would be missed. His disappearance under the circumstances would surely alarm his friends; they would instigate a search for him; but who would think of searching for a live man in the cemetery of Montmartre? The Prefect of Police would set a hundred intelligences at work to find him; the Seine might be dragged, les miserables turned over at the dead-house: a minute description of him would be in every detective's pocket; and he—in M. Dorine's family tomb!

Yet, on the other hand it was here he was last seen; from this point a keen detective would naturally work up the case. Then might not the undertaker return for the candlestick, probably not left by design? Or, again, might not M. Dorine send fresh wreaths of flowers, to take the place of those which now diffused a pungent, aromatic odor throughout the chamber? Ah! what unlikely chances! But if one of these things did not happen speedily, it had better never happen. How long could he keep life in himself?

With unaccelerated pulse, he quietly cut the half-burned candle into four equal parts. "To-night," he meditated, "I will eat the first of these pieces; to-morrow, the second; to-morrow evening, the third; the next day the fourth; and then—then I'll wait!"

He had taken no breakfast that morning, unless a cup of coffee can be called a breakfast. He had never been very hungry before. He was ravenously hungry now. But he postponed the meal as long as practicable. It must have been near midnight, according to his calculation, when he determined to try the first of his four singular repasts. The bit of white-wax was tasteless; but it served its purpose.

His appetite for the time appeased, he found a new discomfort. The humidity of the walls, and the wind that crept through the unseen ventilator, chilled him to the bone. To keep walking was his only resource. A sort of drowsiness, too, occasionally came over him. It took all his will to fight it off. To sleep, he felt was to die; and he had made up his mind to live.

Very strange fancies flitted through his head as he groped up and down the stone floor of the dungeon, feeling his way along the wall to avoid the sepulchres. Voices that had long been silent spoke words that had long been forgotten; faces he had known in childhood grew palpable against the dark. His whole life in detail was unrolled before him like a panorama; the changes of a year, with its burden of love and death, its sweets and its bitternesses, were epitomized in a single second. The desire to sleep had left him. But the keen hunger came again.

It must be near morning now, he mused; perhaps the sun is just gilding the domes and pinnacles of the city; or, may be, a dull drizzling rain is beating on Paris, sobbing on these mounds above me. Paris! it seems like a dream. Did I ever walk in its gay streets in the golden air? O the delight and pain and passion of that sweet human life!

Philip became conscious that the gloom, the silence, and the cold were gradually conquering him. The feverish activity of his brain brought on a reaction. He grew lethargic, he sunk down on the steps, and thought of nothing. His hand fell by chance on one of the pieces of candles; he grasped it and devoured it mechanically. This revived him. "How strange," he thought, "that I am not thirsty. Is it possible that the dampness of the walls, which I must inhale with every breath, has supplied the need of water? Not a drop has passed my lips for two days, and still I experience no thirst. That drowsiness, thank heaven, has gone. I think I was never wideawake until this hour. It would be an anodyne like poison that could weigh down my eyelids. No doubt the dread of sleep has something to do with this."

The minutes were like hours. Now he walked as briskly as he dared up and down the tomb; now he rested against the door. More than once he was tempted to throw himself upon the stone coffin that held Julie, and make no further struggle for his life.

Only one piece of candle remained. He had eaten the third portion, not to satisfy hunger, but from a precautionary motive. He had taken it as a man takes some disagreeable drug upon the result of which hangs safety. The time was rapidly approaching when even this poor substitute for nourishment would be exhausted. He delayed that moment. He gave himself a long fast this time. The half-inch of candle which he held in his hand was a sacred thing to him. It was his last defence against death.

At length, with such a sinking at heart as he had not known before, he raised it to his lips. Then he paused, then he hurled the fragment across the tomb, then the oaken door was flung open, and Philip, with dazzled eyes saw M. Dorine's form sharply defined against the blue sky.

When they led him out, half blinded, into the broad daylight, M. Dorine noticed that Philip's hair, which a short time since was as black as a crow's wing, had actually turned gray in places. The man's eyes, too, had faded; the darkness had spoiled their lustre.

"And how long was he really confined id the tomb?" I asked, as Mr. H—— concluded the story.

"Just one hour and twenty minutes!" replied Mr. H——, smiling blandly.

As he spoke, the little sloops, with their sails all blown out like white roses, came floating bravely into port, and Philip Wentworth lounged by us, wearily, in the pleasant April sunshine.

Mr. H——'s narrative made a deep impression on me. Here was a man who had undergone a strange ordeal. Here was a man whose sufferings were unique. His was no threadbare experience. Eighty minutes had seemed like two days to him! If he had really been immured two days in the tomb, the story, from my point of view, would have lost its tragic element.

After this it was but natural I should regard Mr. Wentworth with deepened interest. As I met him from day to day, passing through the Common with the same abstracted air, there was something in his loneliness which touched me. I wondered that I had not before read in his pale meditative face some such sad history as Mr. H—— had confided to me. I formed the resolution of speaking to him, though with what purpose was not very clear to my mind. One May morning we met at the intersection of two paths. He courteously halted to allow me the precedence.

"Mr. Wentworth," I began, "I—"

He interrupted me.

"My name, sir," he said, in an offhand manner, "is Jones."

"Jo-Jo-Jones!" I gasped.

"Not Jo Jones," he returned coldly, "Frederick."

Mr. Jones, or whatever his name is, will never know, unless he reads these pages, why a man accosted him one morning as "Mr. Wentworth," and then abruptly rushed down the nearest path, and disappeared in the crowd.

The fact is, I had been duped by Mr. H——. Mr. H—— occasionally contributes a story to the magazines. He had actually tried the effect of one of his romances on me!

My hero, as I subsequently learned, is no hero at all, but a commonplace young man who has some connection with the building of that pretty granite bridge that will shortly span the crooked little lake in the Public Garden.

When I think of the cool ingenuity and readiness with which Mr. H—— built up his airy fabric on my credulity, I am half inclined to laugh; though I feel not slightly irritated at having been the unresisting victim of his Black Art.

QUESTION.—If a man sells a watch for fifty dollars, buys it back for forty dollars, then sells it for forty-five dollars how much does he make by the transaction? It looks as though he made fifteen dollars, but he didn't.

SPEECH OF EX-PRESIDENT PIERCE.

AT Concord, New Hampshire, Wednesday evening, October, 9th, at the close of the serenade, Ex-president Pierce delivered the following brief address.

"It has been so long your part and mine my friends and neighbors, to breast and smile back defiance at what we have believed to be the torrent of evil that one hardly knows how to receive notes of triumph. I am free to confess, however, that the results which you have come to announce are not a surprise to me. There have been mutterings, and some distinct enunciations which proclaimed them pretty significantly to my mind. Not the least of these was the encouragement and hope which came down to us from our neighboring State—Montaigne Verte—a noble State, represented by high men for years—Judge Collamer, Gov. Foot, Hiland Hall and others of like stamp. Then came the 18,000 fresh voices from Maine, speaking encouragement and hope. [Cheers and applause.] Then Montana—far-off Montana—came over the mountains with her trumpet-tone, saying: Rallly to the rescue of your country.

> "Wave Munich all thy banners wave,
> And charge with all thy chivalry."

For we are striking hands with you in this great battle for union and independence. Then came California (applause and cheers) booming over cape and ocean to assure us that the Pacific has recovered its feet and is ready for the great conflict, and now I learn we may hope for victory in Ohio, (applause,) which seemed like hoping against all hope. And finally old sturdy Pennsylvania, (great cheering,) which holds Independence Hall, speaks words of terror to the wrong and encouragement to the right. I warn you, my friends to note the fact that these triumphs, whatever they may be, are no party triumphs. The people have risen in their majesty, with a consciousness of their power, and disregarding party lines and party aspirations have been silently considering what belongs to them, their children and their country. I think the great battle has been fought and won. If the results are significant in nothing else they are in this—that the white race our race—the German, Italian, French, Irish, Scotch, and Anglo-Saxon [people—are still to be the controlling power on this continent. It is for you, now, to remember your duties—your fidelity to principles—what you owe to your neighbors—whether they agree with you or not—and to take care that the public weal suffer no detriment at your hands. I thank you for your very kind greeting; and not having strength in my present state of health to say more, I bid you all good-night.

ADVERTISING.

IN every branch of business, the benefits of advertising are immense. There is a risk, but it is small and the probabilities are largely in favor of success when you let it known that you have something for sale, thereby going steadily to work to turn up something, rather than to sit still, "waiting for something to turn up."

The benefits of advertising are known and realized by some, and we see constant proofs of it.

The same means are open to all, but he who neglects them, not only robs himself of a fair advantage, but leaves the field open and the game free to his wiser fellow.

Life abounds in cases of brilliant results to generous policy, and in support of our recommendation of such a course, as wise, we can ask no higher authority than the words of Solomon, who says "there is that which scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that which withholdest more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

Time is money; give your business publicity, and as much may oftimes be accomplished in a few days as would otherwise require weeks and months of time with labor and expense in proportion.

If a man has good property for sale, and time is any object to him, it is idle to speak of the cost of advertising as an objection; as well might he object to any other expense attendant upon the care of his property, or the prosecution of his business; for the small amount ordinarily required for judicious advertising is as nothing when compared with the advantages attendant upon the quick sale and fair price, secured by competition among a number of customers.

An advertisement should be clear, distinct and to the point, conveying in as few words as possible, the description and prominent advantages of the property offered, such an advertisement, inserted once, twice, three, five, ten or twenty times, costs but little, is read, and in a majority of cases it pays.—Ex.

"AMELIA, for thee—yes, all at thy command—I'd tear this eternal firmament into fragments. I'd gather the stars one by one as they tumble from the regions of etherial space and put them in my breeches pocket. I'd pluck the sun, that oriental god of day, that traverses the blue arch of heaven in such majestic splendor. I'd tear him from the sky and quench his bright effulgence in the fountain of my eternal love for thee!"

SOME years ago a clergyman was preaching to a large audience in a wild part of Illinois, and announced for his text: "In my father's house are many mansions." He had hardly read the words, when an old coon stood up and said: "I tell you folks that's a lie! I knew his father well. He lives fifteen miles from Old Kentuck, in an old log cabin, and there ain't but one room in the house."

The Columbian.

BLOOMSBURG, PA.

FRIDAY MORNING, NOV. 1, 1867.

☞ THE COLUMBIAN has the Largest Circulation in Columbia and adjoining counties of any paper published here, and is also a much larger sheet than any of its cotemporaries; and is therefore the best medium for advertising in this section of the State.

COUNTERFEITING UNITED STATES BONDS.—The discovery that the one thousand dollars seven-thirty bonds have been extensively counterfeited, is well calculated to excite uneasiness in the minds of persons who are fortunate enough to have sufficient money to be victimized in that manner. It is not yet known to what extent the fraud has been carried, but it seems to be serious. The worst feature of the discovery is the demonstrated fact that the government bonds can be successfully counterfeited. The feeling of security in the genuineness of all paper ostensibly bearing the government impress, will no longer exist. So much care was taken in the design and workmanship of the plates upon which the bonds were printed, that counterfeiting them was thought to be practically impossible. It will now be necessary for the government to call in all the bonds of the counterfeited issue, and replace them with a new design; and hereafter still greater care will need to be exercised by persons holding government bonds of any kind.

IT turns out after all that, instead of being light, the vote last month in Ohio was the heaviest ever cast. In the counties thus far officially heard from there is an increase of about 60,000 over the vote two years ago, of which the Democrats gain forty and the Republicans twenty thousand. The theory that the Republicans stayed at home, therefore, will not answer. They have evidently in a good many cases voted the other way; and of the new voters who have come into the field within the last two years, the Democrats have got more than their equal share. The "reaction" is more decided than it seemed to be at first.

THE election for the Convention in Virginia, so far as heard from, resulted in a triumph for the Republicans. But few Conservatives are elected, and even the moderate Republicans were repudiated by the negroes. In Richmond the last poll was closed at 1 o'clock Wednesday morning, the negroes having occupied it until that hour. The entire vote cast in the city was 10,051, of which there was for the Convention 5,328 and against it 4,723. The Radical ticket was elected in the city by 404 majority. Twenty-six negroes voted the Conservative ticket, and fifty-one white men voted the Radical ticket.

WHEN the California Democracy carried the Governor at the election in September the Radical press and leaders declared that the defeat of the Radical candidate was owing to his corruption, and that at the judicial election in October they would certainly roll the tide back upon the Democracy. Well, the judicial election came off, a few days ago, and it has resulted in the election of both Democratic candidates—Sprague and Fitzgerald. How the Radicals will account for this second defeat we cannot say, but their silence indicates that they will probably say nothing at all about it.

A GUSHING being at Lancaster, Pa., sends us word that Thad. Stevens is better. "His own will," says the admiring agent, 'even surmounts disease.' We further learn that T. S. is an "Old Commoner," and that he will go to work on his various mild little schemes so as to have them ready to spring on Congress at the opening of the session. "T. S.," the agent says, "has not left Lancaster this summer, although he had intended a visit to his furnace and the Upper Lakes." There is perhaps more likelihood of his visiting the furnace in conjunction with the lower lake.

WHAT is called the "Crawford county system" of making nominations, from the place of its origin, is becoming popular in Pennsylvania. It supersedes the caucus, and is in fact, a preliminary election, the voters of the party meeting at the usual polling places and casting their ballots directly for those they prefer as candidates. The votes are reported to headquarters and the candidates having the highest number are made the regular nominees.

SOME three years ago a man was arrested in New York and incarcerated in a foul and loathsome cell of a dungeon by military edict, his only crime being that he had spoken "disrespectfully of Mrs. Lincoln"—but she was the wife of the government then. The Radical papers are now saying worse things about her than were ever dreamed of by any Democrat.

THE public will recollect that at the Surratt trial the panel of jurors in the Criminal Court here was quashed because the law had not been complied with. Last week a new panel was ordered and twenty-six names were drawn. They are all white, as the law yet includes the word "white" in its phraseology. Congress tried to change it at its last session, but the President pocketed the bill.

AN IMPORTANT DOCUMENT.

IF the speech of Mr. Buckalew which is printed in this paper were carefully read by our Republican fellow-citizens, we should confidently expect even a more general change of votes than that which we now have good reason to anticipate in this State and elsewhere. We trust that its length, rendered necessary by the scope of the important details of political history explained by him, will deter no one from reading it with the attention due to its clear and convincing exposition of public affairs. When Mr. Buckalew was chosen to the Senate by the Legislature of Pennsylvania, in 1863, high expectations were formed of the standing he would attain in that body, from his well-known ability and reputation. He has been an infrequent speaker, however; and, perhaps has judged wisely, in not wasting his influence by "beating the air," but prefered to bide his time. In Congress, in fact, as with the majority of the people, in the country, the most unanswerable appeals to reason and justice and Constitutional principle, and to every magnanimous and truly patriotic emotion, has seemed to fall as ineffectually as a summons to life addressed to the dull cold ear of death.

But the downward course of things has at length startled the people from their torpor and blind reliance upon men who have shown themselves so unworthy of confidence; and the just dread of fatal mischief to overtake our republican institutions has created the opportunity so earnestly longed for by the friends of popular rights and liberties. At this favorable exigency, Mr. Buckalew has been found equal to the occasion, and in the most deliberate and complete manner has brought together and set down on record that astounding series of facts which constitutes the legislative action of Congress, for the professed restoration of the Union, since the cessation of arms between the sections. The great value of the speech, therefore, consists in its timely delivery; in the weight due to whatever a statesman so able and so unassuming has thought it necessary to say; and in the fact, that the topics he discusses are of the most pressing and immediate interest to the present well-being and future existence of the republic; that he has been himself so situated as to know personally the exact nature of the transactions developed and the motives and causes leading to them; that his speech is perfectly intelligible by all who choose to give it perusal; that it furnishes a careful explanation of the questions actually at issue between the parties; and is, in reality, a clear and concise history of the rise and progress of that monstrous scheme of legislation by the Republican Congress, intended to promote confusion and division and to postpone Union, and which has thus far unhappily availed to effect that iniquitous object.

However the better disposed among the people may have observed and deplored the special instances of wrong doing as they individually occurred, few persons are in possession of the accumulated facts, or have had the means of marshalling them, in all their deformity, for careful inspection and reflection, until Mr. Buckalew thus opportunely set them forth for popular information. In the view which we have thus taken of it, the speech seems to us positively invaluable, both for present and future use. Yet in only one journal have we seen it printed; and we have been, therefore, induced to give it whatever currency it may have through our columns. No fairer comment could be furnished upon the justice of this exposure of the revolutionary scheme pursued by the radical leaders for the destruction of our free institutions, than by the following unqualified admission of a journal so high in repute with no inconsiderable section of the Republican party—as the New York Times. It says:

> "We do not think that the great body of the people, or of the Republican party, are satisfied with the manner in which this question (Reconstruction) has been treated. They are not satisfied that we have the right to force universal negro suffrage upon the people of the Southern States at the point of the bayonet, and to exclude those States from the Union until they accept it; nor that it would be good policy to exercise the right if we had it. Still less are they satisfied that it is either just, or expedient, while thus admitting the negroes to the ballot-box, without qualifications of any kind, to exclude the great body of the whites,—thus handing over the government of those States to the absolute control of the negroes within them. The practical result of such a policy shocks the public sense of justice. Every man, no matter how strong his party feeling may be, shrinks from a policy so entirely at war with fair dealing. And while these acts of the Republican party have excited discontent, the speeches, menaces, and loose talk of many of its most influential members have done still more in the same direction. The threat constantly held over the South that, 'if it does not take this it shall be forced to take something worse—the menaces of confiscation—the bullying insolence which such men as Wade, Chandler, Nye, Ashley, and men of their stamp mistake for statesmanship, and the coarse, vulgar and offensive tone they habitually adopt towords all who differ with them in opinion—the evident purpose of leading political managers to perpetuate their own power by excluding the South from all share in the Presidential election—the fulsome laudation and servile sycophancy displayed, on every occasion and in every relation towards the negro, and the open, undisguised contempt with which the pretensions of white men, even to an equality of faculties, privileges and rights, are treated by some of the fanatics who claim to be Republican leaders—these are among the things which have helped to disgust thousands of the calmer and more considerate members of the party, and to hold them aloof from the political contests of the day."—Boston Courier.

A CORRUPT LEGISLATURE.—The Doylestown Democrat makes a severe charge against the radical Pennsylvania Legislature in the following paragraph:

> At the last session the two Houses of the Assembly employed and paid for their services out of the public funds, more than sixty women. This was never heard of before in the history of the State. We can safely say that that number of women was not employed about the Legislature for a good purpose. Their duties were merely nominal. If there were that number of offices to be filled they would have been given to partisan favorites; but as the woman were appointed to temporary situations, it leads to a suspicion that it was done to enable them to be near members under whose protection they live, move, and have their being. We doubt whether a respectable woman would go to Harrisburg and accept employment about the Legislature. Their pay was $36 each per session—too small a sum to tempt a respectable woman to leave her home and family and take service under a political body.

THE FOUNTIN UV YOUTH.—A Morin Tale—warranted purely vegitable, and none genuine onless signed by the Proprietor.

[By Petroleum V. Nasby, P. M., (wich is Postmaster.)]

CHAP. I.

It wuz in Noo York city, that gay metropolis, the seet uv luxury and refinement, and the home uv John Morrisey and the Black Crook.

Thither had I come, after O how many days uv tiresome walkin ez the rear guard uv a drove uv the cattle uv a thousand hills uv western Pennsylvany. I wuz in Noo York, and on Brodway wuz a site! The rumblin, jumblin, mass uv wagons and stages and coaches! the sidewalks filled with a hurryin mass, the rich, the poor, the high, the low, the proud, the humble, the aged, the youthful!

I gazed into the winder uv a drug store. Fatal gaze! Unfortnit look! That look hed an infloence into my fucher life.

Wat did I see?

A card.

Thus it red: "Barrett's Hair Restorative!" with a picter uv a man with thin, gray lox afore usin it, and the same man with heavy hair ez black ez Poe's stately raven uv the days uv yore, after yoosin it.

Only this and nothin more.

It wuz enuff. My hair wuz gray. I brought a bottle and applied it ez by directions on the wrapper.

CHAP. II.

Home again! home again! from a furrin shore! I wuz on the threshold uv my homestid, wich wuz a home to me, humble though it wuz. Loolzer Jane, the wife uv my buzzum, wuz at the gate a gossipin with her nabor ez wuz her wont.

"Loolzer Jane!" shreekt I.

"S-i-r!" sed she in a surprised tone.

"Ha," hist I, "is this the treatment a fond husband receeves on his return to the buzzum uv his family?

"Husband! yoo? is't possible? Where is them gray lox? Hast grown young agin, ez when in manhood's prime thou woodst and won me? It cannot be,—and yit,—that breath! It is! it is!" and she swoondid at my feet. The chilbren I hed more trouble with, but they finally acknowledged me. The nose wuz the feecher they took hold uv; that wuz unchanged.

CHAP. III.

"Husband mine!" sed she to me in her winninest tone, "thy locks is black, while mine, alas! is gray. Buy for me also Barrett's potent cure, that I may be ez fust yoo knowd me in love's young dream!"

Cood I resist the entreaty? Nary. I bought a bottle, and lo! in a month she wuz transformed. Her rusty gray hair besome ez black ez jet. A new set uv custom-made teeth, wich cost me fifty dollars, completed the metamorphose, and she wuz young agin,—her yooth costin me fifty-one dollars, cash.

Disastrous investment! Four weeks from that date, she run off with a yankee pedlar, who 'sposed she wuz but twenty-four!

Kin I sue Barrett and git judgment for her valyoo? Alas, no! And so I plod on wearily and alone, a mizable objick. I cood marry agin ez a young man, but this fond heart kin never thump for anuther.

False Loolzer Jane! Too efficashus Barrett! The eend.

THE DIAMOND DICKENS.—Little Dorrit—The eighth volume of the dainty little "Diamond Edition" of Dickens is now out, completing nearly two-thirds of the whole series. The same merits that we have admitted for the former volumes of this edition mark the present volume, namely, compactness, beauty of typography, substantial paper, characteristic illustrations, handiness of size, elegance of appearance and are markable cheapness. It slips easily into an ordinary coat pocket, taking up but little space, whilst it is handsome enough, inside and out, for the library shelf or the parlor table.—Cleveland Herald.

The probability that Dickens will come to this country to give readings from his works makes it desirable for all who hope to hear and thoroughly appreciate him, to be acquainted with his wonderful writings. The Diamond Edition renders this practicable for all. The cost of each volume of the beautiful Illustrated Diamond Dickens is only $1.50; plain edition, $1.25. It can be procured of any bookseller, or will be sent postpaid by the Publishers, Ticknor and Fields, Boston.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—A man was knocked off the trestling at the Baltimore store by the morning train of the Lehigh Valley Railroad on Monday morning last. He was a boatman from Beach Haven or Columbia county, named Lewis Musselman. His injuries are severe, but there are hopeful indications of his recovery. His wants have been ministered to by the Odd Fellows of Wilks-Barre, he being a member of that order. He lies at the North Branch Hotel, and Mr. Thos. Boyd, the proprietor, has kindly shown him every attention. He is attended by Dr. J. E. Bulkeley.—Luzerne Union.

FOREIGN NEWS.

MONDAY, Oct. 28.

The news from Italy is startling. Telegrams received in Paris and in London announce that Gen. Garibaldi, having gathered a large force around him, is marching upon Rome. Garibaldi's command is divided in two columns, and that headed by the agitator has reached Monte Rotondo, only a few miles from and within sight of the Eternal City. The Papal troops were, at last accounts, retiring slowly before the Garibaldians, who have again recaptured Bagnarea, the town they had already held. Civita Vecchia is in a state of siege. The semi-official British Press opines that Italian affairs are in a worse condition than when Napoleon planned the French expedition in the interest of the Pope.

The Fenian trials are in progress at Manchester. The trial of Grove was completed Saturday, and the jury found a verdict of not guilty. Mugridge, who confessed that he shot O'Donnell, was discharged after a short examination, there being no doubt in the mind of the Court that the man was hopelessly insane. The trials of the Fenians now imprisoned in Dublin will begin Monday. Gen. Fariola has declined the services of counsel, and will defend himself. It is reported that a man from Dungarvon has already turned State's evidence.

WEDNESDAY Oct. 30th.—Particulars have been received of the engagement at Monte Retondo. They represent that the fighting was obstinate on both sides. At one time during the day, when reinforcements for the Papal troops arrived upon the field, and issue appeared doubtful, but at end of the conflict Gen. Garibaldi, who led his volunteers in persons, was completely successful. Garibaldi immediately followed up his victory, and the defeated soldiers of the Pope, who fell back on Rome, vigorously pursued. At the latest accounts from the South the revolutionists, estimated at from 10,000 to 12,000 strong, had advanced to the outer fortifications of Rome. Monday's advices from Rome announce that great agitation prevailed within the city, as the authorities hourly expected an attack from the Garibaldians. The Pope has retired from the Vatican, and sought refuge and protection within the Castle St. Angelo. He has issued an encyclical calling the attention of the Bishops of the Church to the great perils by which he is surounded.

TUESDAY Oct. 29.—Florence dispatches set forth Victor Emanuel's soldiers to fight against Garibaldi. The cause of national unity in the councils of the King's Govenment is fast gaining ground, and it is now understood that a thoroughly radical Ministry will be formed, whose policy will be to make Rome the capital of Italy. The French fleet sailed from Toulon Saturday under orders to proceed direct to Civita Vecchia.

The Pope has addressed a letter to the Roman Catholic Bishops throughout the world, calling upon them to pray for the Holy See.

Friday, the police of Rome, when about to search a house, met with some resistance. They at once used the bayonet, and killed fifteen Garibaldians.

THE Republican members of Congress who meditate impeaching President Johnson and suspending him from office during his trial are commended to the study of "Madison's Debates in the Federal Convention," from which the following extract is made:

> "FRIDAY Sept. 14, 1787.
> "In Convention * * * * *
> "Mr. Rutledge and Mr. Gouverneur Morris moved that persons impeached be suspended from their offices until they be tried and acquitted."
> "Mr. Madison—The President is made too dependent already on the Legislature by the power of one branch to try him in consequence of an impeachment by the other. This intermediate suspension will put him in the power of one branch only. They can at any moment, in order to make way for the function of another who will be more favorable to their views, vote a temporary removal of the existing magistrate.

RESOLUTIONS OF CONDOLENCE.

AT a regular meeting of Van Camp Lodge, No. 140, I. O. O. F., held in their Lodge Room October 19th 1867, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted and ordered to be printed:

WHEREAS, It has pleased God in His all Wise Providence to remove from our midst our worthy Brother Richard Birch, and, whereas, by his death we have lost an estimable brother, and the Lodge a worthy member, therefore

Resolved, That while we deeply lament the death of our brother, we bow with humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, knowing that he is too wise to err and too good to be unkind.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the bereaved widow, and orphan children of our deceased brother, and earnestly recommend them to Him who has promised to be the "God of the widow and the father of the fatherless."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the family of our deceased Brother, and the Lodge be draped in mourning for thirty days.

WE clip from the Report of the Board of Missions of the Episcopal Church, the annual meeting of which was held a couple of week's ago, under the head of "Africa:" the following paragraph, in reference to a lady well known in Bloomsburg, the daughter of Dr. David N. Scott. Bishop Payne sailed from Africa on the fifth of September. The report says:

> Miss Margaretta Scott has had the entire charge of the Mission school at Cavalla during the Bishop's absence in this country. A naval officer who recently visited that station, writes to a brother in this country an account of his visit, in which he says:—
> "Miss Scott attends personally to the feeding, clothing, and educating of sixty children; is doctress to the surrounding country, and in addition, edits the Cavalla Messenger. Such energy, enthusiasm and devotion in the work never seemed possible."

SPECIAL NOTICES.

Iron in the Blood.

The necessity of a due proportion of iron in the blood is well known to all medical men; when it becomes reduced from any cause whatever, the whole system suffers, the weakest part being first attacked, and a feeling of languor, lassitude, and "all goneness" pervades the system. Stimulants only afford temporary relief, and have the same effect as giving a tired horse the whip instead of oats. The true remedy is to supply the blood with the necessary quantity of iron. This can be done by using the a protected solution of the protoxide of Iron, which is so prepared that it assimilates at once with the blood, giving strength, vigor and new life to the whole system.

To take medicine to cure diseases occasioned by a deficiency of IRON IN THE BLOOD, without restoring it to the system, is like trying to repair a building when the foundation is gone.

An eminent divine says: "I have been using the PERUVIAN SYRUP for some time past; it gives me new vigor, buoyancy of spirits, elasticity of muscle."

Pamphlets containing certificates of cures, and recommendations from some of the most eminent physicians, clergymen and others, will be sent free to any address.

The genuine has "PERUVIAN SYRUP" blown in the glass.

THE RICHEST MAN IN THE WORLD.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM BARON SOLOMON ROTHSCHILD.

PARIS, 8th April, 1861, 25 Rue Taubry, St. Honore.

Will you be kind enough to have forwarded to me here 30 bottles of your Indian Liniment; if you will send at the same time the amount, I will forward you the amount through Messrs. Belmont & Co., New York.

Baron Solomon Rothschild having recommended to many of his friends Major LANE'S LINIMENT, and they being desirous to procure it, he should advise him to establish a depot in Paris.

THE INDIAN LINIMENT,

As a relief, ever ready; as a killer of pain, taken inwardly, or outwardly applied, has no equal. For the relief and cure of Rheumatic and Neuralgic Affections, Sprains, Bruises, etc., it is unequalled. It is also most efficacious, taken inwardly, in the cure of Cholera, Cramps and Pains in the Stomach, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, Cholera Morbus, Cholera Infantum, etc., and is without exception the most wonderful Panacea the world affords. No Family should be without it. Every Traveler by land or sea should have a bottle. Miners and Farmers residing at a distance from Physicians should keep it constantly on hand. In case of Accidents, and sudden attacks of Stomach Complaints, its value cannot be estimated. Inquire for Major Lane's Indian Liniment, and take no other. Price, 50 cts. per bottle. For sale at wholesale and retail by Demas Barnes & Co., 21 Park Row, N. Y., Gale & Co., Robinson, 186 Greenwich st. N. Y.; F. C. Wells & Co., 192 Fulton-st., N. Y.; Chas. N. Crittenden, 38 6th Ave., N. Y., and by respectable Druggists throughout the world. None genuine unless signed by John Thos. Lane, and countersigned by J. T. Lane & Co., Proprietors 187 Broadway, N. Y. ☞Send for Circulars.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.

THE TRUE REMEDY AT LAST DISCOVERED. UPHAM'S FRESH MEAT CURE, prepared from the formula of Prof. Trousseau of Paris, cures Consumption, Lung Disease, Bronchitis, Dyspepsia, Marasmus, General Debility and all morbid conditions of the system dependent on deficiency of vital force. It is pleasant to taste, and a single bottle will convince the most skeptical of its virtue as the great healing remedy of the age. $1 a bottle, or six bottles for $5. Sent by Express. Sold by S. C. Upham, No. 25 South 8th St., Philadelphia, and principal Druggists. Circulars sent free.

IN THE COURT OF COMMON

PLEAS IN AND FOR THE COUNTY OF COLUMBIA.

COLUMBIA COUNTY, ss:

SEAL. I certify, that at a Court of Common Pleas, for the county aforesaid, held at Bloomsburg, on the 4th day of September, 1867, before the Honorable William Elwell, President and his Associates Justices of said court,

In the matter of proceedings in partition.

The inquest having made return that the premises in said proceeding described, could not be divided without prejudice to or spoiling the whole. On motion of Robert F. Clark, Esq., the Court confirms said return and granted a rule on all the parties interested, to accept or refuse the said premises at the valuation put upon it, or in case of neglect or refusal to accept the same, to show cause why the same should not be sold, returnable on the first Monday of December 1867.

Witness my hand and seal of said Court, this 4th day of September, 1867.

The Columbian.

BLOOMSBURG, FRIDAY, NOV. 1, 1867.

THE President has appointed Thursday, the 28th day of November next, as a day of general thanksgiving,

JOHN LEACOCK, the obliging landlord of the American House has opened a neat and commodious Restaurant in the basement of his Hotel.

DR. E. W. WELLS, (successor to Dr. F. C. Harrison,) has taken rooms at the American House. All orders left there will be promptly attended to.

AN exchange says: "General Grant deserves the thanks of all honest men for exposing Governor Geary's attempted fraud upon the ballot-box at Fort Delaware." Yes he does.

WE print this week an unusually interesting batch of new advertisements. By reference to the Sheriff's proclamation it will be seen that in December we hold a two week's court, instead of one as printed in some other papers in the County.

THE State Legislature, since the recent election, will stand—Senate, Republicans 20, Democrats, 13, Republican majority 7; House, Republicans, 54, Democrats, 46—Republican majority 8. Majority for the Republicans on joint ballot, 15.

CATAWISSA RAILROAD.—The road under the management of Chief Superintendent, George W. Webb, has become one of the safest and best conducted roads in the State. An accident is scarcely ever heard of. In consequence, the passenger traffic has increased very rapidly within a few months.

U. S. MUSICAL REVIEW.—We are in receipt of a new monthly devoted to the advancement of musical interests. It is called the U. S. Musical Review, and is published on the first of each month, by J. L. Peters, at No. 200 Broadway, New York, at $1.50 per annum in advance, or at greatly reduced rates to clubs. Each number contains eight pages of choice, new music, worth more than the price of the paper.

WE have received the first number of the Sentinel, published at Sunbury, by Young & Auten. It gives evidence of ability, and from the experience of its editors we have no doubt it will prove a valuable auxiliary to the Democracy of Northumberland County. Let the people have light, and the success of our cause is assured. Northumberland should roll up in 1868, 1,000 Democratic majority.

PREVIOUS to the election the Radicals endeavored to frighten weak minded voters by alarming reports of the "bloody rebel militia" of Maryland, who were to invade Pennsylvania instanter, in case the Democrats secured a victory. Judging from our own valorous militia, they would not do much damage save to peaceful barn-yards; nevertheless, to guard against danger had'nt Geary better call out 50,000 men, and with them secure and defend some convenient Gap?

NOTWITHSTANDING the fact that the Democrats have been generally successful this Fall's elections, we do not see that our bonds have depreciated very much at home or abroad. The Radical predictions were made for effect merely, because they well know that we have always opposed repudiation, and the only example of it in the history of our State was set by the Radicals themselves when they resolved to pay holders of Pennsylvania bonds in currency.

A CENTENARIAN.—Mrs. Lizzie Freeze, mother of our townsman G. W. Freeze, died on Wednesday of last week, at her residence, near Pottsgrove, having arrived at the extraordinary age of over 100 years. She was born in Bucks county, but came to this neighborhood when in her 17th year. The country was then a wilderness. What striking changes she must have been witness to during that long roll of years? She died as she lived, a Christian. Peace to her ashes.—Danville Intelligencer.

WE are pleased to announce that a quarry of the finest slate has been discovered in Montour Township, in this County, on the lands of John Richards. The quarry has been leased by Peter Bechtel, Edward Yost, and Dr. George Yost, and we are assured that it will soon be in working order. We have no doubt it will prove renumerative to the owners and lessees, and its proximity to our town will aid in its development, and place a first class slate within reach of all our citizens. Specimens can be seen at this office.

LAST week we published a notice of Sen. Buckalew's Williamsport Speech, from the Boston Post, the leading Democratic journal in New England. This week we publish an editorial notice of the same speech from the Boston Courier, (edited by Geo. Lunt, the famous historian) another leading New England paper. These involuntary tributes to the statesmanship of Senator Buckalew, coming as they do from the leading Democratic organs of the nation, are exceedingly grateful to his friends, and a full vindication of his course for the past four years. His utterances are listened to and respected even by his opponents, and the time has come when his acknowledged ability can be of service to his country and his party.

THE TREATMENT OF TRUNKS.—The bruised and battered condition of an unfortunate trunk that has been on a summer tour is one of those things which are said to beggar description. The lofty indifference to the sacrifice of property which is manifested by a professional baggage-smasher may be very exasperating when practically viewed by an interested traveler, but is certainly charming and sublime when considered a esthetically. He has a tranquil delight in seeing a trunk tumble from a high elevation, turn upon the weakest corner and then turn bottom sides up. If it bursts open he is still calm and imperturable; he does not visibly gloat over the destruction; but he secretly reflects upon the probability of earning fifty cents by tying it up. The anxieties of trunk owners are the spice of life. Hinges, lock and wooden joints are as stubble to him. Nothing is able to withstand him but sole leather and iron. Persons who are obliged to carry leather trunks will find it to their interest to put good leather straps around them.

And at numerous Institutes and County Fairs including all the Fairs at which they were exhibited the past three years. First Prizes have also been awarded these Machines at the exhibitions of LONDON, PARIS, DUBLIN, LINZ, Besancon, Bayonne, St. Dizier, Chalons, and they have been furnished, by special command, to the Empress of France, Empress of Austria, Empress of Russia, Empress of Brazil, Queen of Spain, and Queen of Bavaria.

THE GROVER & BAKER
ELASTIC-STICH

are superior to all others for the following reasons:—

1. They sew with two threads direct from the spools, and requiring no rewinding.
2. They are more easily understood and used, and less liable to derangement than other machines.
3. They are capable of executing perfectly, without change of adjustment, a much greater variety of work than other machines.
4. The stitch made by these machines is much more firm, elastic, and durable, especially upon articles which require to be washed and ironed, than any other stitch.
5. This stitch, owing to the manner in which the under thread is inwrought, is much the most plump and beautiful in use, and retains this plumpness and beauty even upon articles frequently washed and ironed until they are worn out.
6. The structure of the seam is such that, though it be cut or broken at intervals of only a few stitches, it will neither open, run, nor ravel, but remain firm and durable.
7. Unlike other machines, these fasten both ends of the seam by their own operation.
8. With these machines, while silk is used upon the right or face side of the seam, cotton may be used upon the other side without lessening the strength or durability of the seam. This can be done on no other machine, and is a great saving upon all articles stitched or made up with silk.
9. These machines, in addition to their superior merits as instruments for sewing, by a change of adjustment, easily learned and practised, execute the most beautiful and permanent embroidery and ornamental work.

In addition to their family machines they have also the

making a stitch alike on both sides. This Company make both the Lock and Double stitch Machines, so that persons having a preference can select such as they like best, and if not suited can exchange for the other, thus giving the public the advantage of this arrangement. They also make the newly invented an advance upon all machines heretofore known for sewing with the Lock-Stitch. It is of great power and strength, especially adapted for tailors, shoemakers, harness-makers, carriage-trimmers, and for all descriptions of work to which the lock-stitch is applicable. It works with equal facility silk, cotton, or linen thread, and will sew the finest muslin as well as the thickest leather. Price $80; with Hemmers, $85. Their No. 9 is containing many improvements, adapted for tailoring, vest-making, light shoemaking, as well as for family sewing. Large numbers of these machines are in use, and they give universal satisfaction. None who have seen this machine will willingly use the noisy and cumbrous lock-stitch machines heretofore in general use. Price $55; with Hemmers, $60.

NO. 1 LOCK STITCH MACHINES

These machines of every description can be had at the agent's office in Bloomsburg, at positively the manufacturer's prices, to which the attention of the public is especially invited.
